"Bitches callin' my phone like I'm locked up, nonstop," Drake raps with typical braggadocio on the chorus. "I'm a popstar, not a doctor."That flex extends throughout the song's verses, where he takes things a step further by very casually namedropping some of his celebrity acquaintances. Again, this is Drake we're talking about — he's rubbed shoulders with everyone from Beyoncé to Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau — so it's no surprise that he's familiar with everyone in the music game and feels more than comfortable saying so.Ariana Grande and Selena Gomez get a mention: "Look, Ariana, Selena, my Visa. It can take as many charges as it needs to, my girl."As does friend and past collaborator ("Right Here") Justin Bieber: "Crown in my hand and I'm really playin' keep-away. Shit don't even usually get this big without a Bieber face." Drake even taps the music greats, paying his respects (kind of) to the star power of mega producer David Foster and the late great Whitney Houston with a clever reference tying in the legend's role in the 1992 film The Bodyguard alongside Kevin Costner: "Popstar" is just one of Drake's many releases of 2020. Earlier this spring, he dropped Dark Lane Demo Tapes, a mixtape of unreleased gems that featured artists like Future, Chris Brown, and Giveon. And he plans to keep his name top of mind for the rest of the year with an unnamed sixth studio album that is set to release some time this summer. "CHEFFETE," he cryptically captioned a meme on his Instagram page earlier this week, hinting at the album's drop.The "Nonstop" rapper has been dominating the summer charts for years — we have Drake to thank for the memorable vibes of 2016 given to us courtesy of the genius "Work" and "Control" blend at every function. And while his latest track doesn't exactly have the reply value of "Nice for What," "In My Feelings," or even "Toosie Slide," it's a reminder that Drake is a pretty big deal, and he's fully aware of that fact.So "Popstar" will have to do, for now. At least until we get the new music later this summer. We all love listening to songs. Isn't it interesting how listening to a song can bring back a special memory or make you feel happy or calm? By Andra Picincu Updated June 21, 2022 Famous disc jockeys (DJs) like Steve Aoki, Tiesto and David Guetta earn millions and travel the world to delight audiences with their music. However, while there are plenty of DJ gigs in London and other big cities, landing one can be tricky — especially for newcomers. If you're just starting your career, you can leverage social media to build a reputation and gain fans. Also, it's important to network with other DJs and explore the local music scene while actively pursuing job opportunities. Focus on building connections with other DJs, club managers, promoters and agents who could help you find work. You could also start as a mobile DJ and play your music at private parties, weddings or company events. Working as a DJ requires more than just playing music at nightclubs, radio stations and other venues. DJs are also responsible for creating playlists, engaging the audience, taking music requests and interviewing studio guests. Depending on the job, they may also interact with their fans on social media and other platforms, sell advertising time, present information on radio, and work with musicians during events, notes the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. Disc jockeys can specialize in one or more areas, such as radio, mobile or club DJing. For example, turntablist DJs use turntables to create sound effects and make their own music. Radio DJs, on the other hand, may interview guests, discuss current events and host contests for the public — in addition to playing music. Club DJs use their skills to keep people dancing in clubs, restaurants and other venues. If you choose to work as a mobile DJ, you'll play musical recordings at weddings, birthday parties, corporate events and other social gatherings, explains Musicians Institute. With that in mind, it's best to choose a niche rather than trying to be a little bit of everything. Take into account your interpersonal skills, favorite music genres and work experience, as well as the type of equipment you have available. Mobile DJs, for instance, must bring their own equipment to events and may need a van, portable controllers and other special gear that can run into thousands of dollars. DJ employment opportunities are scarce, notes the Princeton Review. Novice DJs often find themselves running from one venue to another, taking "test nights" and building connections. Some start out by working for free or paying to play, which allows them to gain experience and establish a fan base. They also work until late at night and have a difficult time finding regular gigs. The Princeton Review suggests reaching out to record promoters, club managers and other third parties that could help you make a name for yourself. It helps to have a website or blog, prepare promo materials and advertise your services on social media. For example, you could set up a Facebook ad campaign that targets promoters and agents. Another way to promote yourself is to start your own club night, recommends London Sound Academy. With this business model, you organize regular events around your services as a DJ and receive a percentage of the bar's revenue or ticket sales. The key is to come up with a unique concept that resonates with the club's audience and choose the right platforms to promote the event. Whether you're looking for DJ jobs in the UK, the U.S. or other regions, you can use the internet to connect with club managers and promoters. For starters, browse online platforms like Music Jobs, Indeed, Star DJs (Ireland) and Club Med Jobs. The Entertainers Worldwide website features freelance DJ jobs in Europe, North America, Thailand, Cuba and other locations, so you might want to give it a try. Go one step further and reach out directly to the venues that interest you. Send them a couple of recordings, describe your services and propose an event that would generate exposure for both parties. Meanwhile, try to engage with other DJs and arrange gig swaps whenever possible. This can be a good opportunity to reach new audiences, build meaningful connections and broaden your horizons. Alternatively, you could start as a mobile DJ and promote your services to local businesses, families and other prospective clients. Think of it as a way to hone your skills and make an income without being tied to a particular location.
